

FILED
09-20-2024
CLERK OF WISCONSIN
SUPREME COURT

STATE OF WISCONSIN
IN SUPREME COURT

Appeal No. 2024AP1872

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.,

Petitioner-Appellant,

v.

WISCONSIN ELECTIONS COMMISSION, ET AL.,

Respondent-Respondent.

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.'S REPLY BRIEF

On Appeal from the Dane County Circuit Court,
the Honorable Stephen E. Ehlke Presiding,
Case No. 2024CV2653

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.,
Petitioner-Appellant

HURLEY BURISH, S.C.
33 E. Main Street
Madison, WI 53703
(608) 257-0945
jbugni@hurleyburish.com

Joseph A. Bugni
Wisconsin Bar No. 1062514

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF CONTENTS	2
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES.....	3
I. Kennedy can't be treated worse than the major-party candidates or have his First Amendment Rights infringed.	4
II. The Commission's attempts to escape that logic are unavailing and should be rejected.	5
A. The Commission's arguments about the statute ignore that Kennedy wants off the ballot not on it and that precedent supports flexibility for independent candidates.	5
B. Kennedy (like every citizen) has the right to convey a clear message without the Commission compromising it.	7
C. Hawkins does not control here; instead, in equity a remedy can be fashioned.	10
CERTIFICATION	12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Bullock v. Carter , 405 U.S. 134, 143 (1972)	7
Brown County v. Brown Cnty. Taxpayers Ass. , 2022 WI 13, 400 Wis. 2d 781, 971 N.W.2d 491	7
Citizens United v. FEC , 558 U.S. 310, 366 (2010).....	8
Colorado Republican Federal Campaign Comm. v. Federal Election Comm. , 518 U.S. 604 (1996)	8
Hawkins v. Wisconsin Elections Commission , 2020 WI 75, 393 Wis. 2d 629, 948 N.W.2d 877	10
Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party , 520 U.S. 351 (1997).....	8, 9

Statutes

Wis. Stat. § 8.16	6
Wis. Stat. § 8.20	6

Other Authorities

No. OAG 55-80, 1980 WL 119496 (Wis. A.G. Sept. 17, 1980)	6
--	---

I. Kennedy can't be treated worse than the major-party candidates or have his First Amendment Rights infringed.

Kennedy has an absolute right to endorse Donald Trump for President. He's done that in myriad ways: he's appeared at rallies, spoken on talk shows, and provided public endorsements whenever and wherever he could. In Wisconsin, he wants everyone who will listen to him to vote for Trump. That is core political speech and it's protected under the First Amendment. In an effort to ensure that message is conveyed clearly and without confusion, he asked that his name not appear on the Wisconsin ballot. He did so well before the Commission voted to put him on the ballot and before the major parties even had to submit a candidate. The reason he asked to withdraw his name from the race was to make sure there was no confusion in his message: in Wisconsin, I want everyone to vote for Trump! The Commission refused to honor that request and instead placed him on the ballot. In doing so, the Commission has created confusion and compelled a message that Kennedy wants no part of—namely, I still want your votes, I'm still running. I may attend rallies, I may stump for Trump, but really, where it counts, in the seclusion and secrecy of the voting booth, choose me.

The question is: in the realm of constitutional rights what does everything in that paragraph implicate? Intuitively, it feels amiss. Democrats and Republicans have an additional month to get off (and on) the ballot that Kennedy and the other independent candidates don't have. That just can't be right. And on top of that, the Commission won't allow him to withdraw even though it was before the Commission formally acted and even though it creates voter confusion—conveying a message that Kennedy himself does not endorse. The reason it feels amiss is that it's wrong. The Equal Protection Clause ensures equal treatment between the major parties and the independent candidates. And the First Amendment prevents the Commission from diminishing Kennedy's message or putting forth a message he doesn't agree with.

II. The Commission's attempts to escape that logic are unavailing and should be rejected.

Everything about this case can be summed up in those two paragraphs. Judges know that third-party candidates can't be treated differently and no one can be compelled to give a message that he or she doesn't endorse. The particulars for all those points are spelled out in the previous briefing. What follows is why the Commission's counterarguments are unavailing. To escape those basic points, the Commission lodges several arguments. It makes technical arguments about the different deadlines and how they are reasonably related to important interests. And it makes arguments that Kennedy's rights are not at issue here—all that matters is the voters' rights. But in doing so it ignores that the distinction between the rights of candidates and voters is not easily separated. Indeed, here it is Kennedy's message that matters, and the voters have a right not be confused by anything that muddles that message—in particular, the message his name being on the ballot conveys. Finally, The Commission argues that Hawkins controls, but properly understood, Hawkins is a much different situation from what we have here.

A. The Commission's arguments about the statute ignore that Kennedy wants off the ballot not on it and that precedent supports flexibility for independent candidates.

First, it makes technical arguments: the differing deadlines stem from different needs with verifying signatures and making sure everything complies with state law; and, it argues, there is no right to get off the ballot—once you declare, you're stuck there. But both arguments miss the point. The different deadlines and all the work that they can entail make sense for candidates getting on the ballot, but here Kennedy wants off the ballot. He wants to save the Commission the time and effort of checking those forms. So the needs prompting a two-tiered deadline don't apply. The second point also fails. Here, Kennedy had to declare by August 6 and (under the Commission's logic) withdraw that same day if he didn't want to be on the ballot. But Trump and Harris could declare on August 6 and for the next month contemplate the situation and change their minds. They could drop out or swap out another candidate. That clearly benefits the major parties over the independents.

The only other time the issue of disparate treatment between parties has come up (and there only partially) was in the infamous 1980 National Unity Campaign. There, when scandal rocked the Vice Presidential candidate, the powers-that-be didn't want to allow the National Unity Campaign the ability to switch out the Vice Presidential candidate – despite the Republicans and Democrats having that exact same ability on an extended timeline.¹ This was challenged on various grounds, and when consulted, the Attorney General gave his opinion: “Preventing Anderson from considering relevant issues and events in the selection of his running mate during this critical period of electoral activity, as are the major parties, is a substantial disability for his campaign.”² The opinion added in a note that resonates here: “Further, the interest of all the citizens of Wisconsin in having their presidential electors cast meaningful votes in the event the Anderson ticket should gain a plurality in the November election counsels against including anyone but Lucey on the Anderson ticket.”³ Put differently, the voters don't benefit from different rules for different parties, and for that matter, the Equal Protection Clause doesn't allow it.⁴

Here, Wisconsin's deadlines hamstringing third-party candidates, while giving Democrats and Republicans a greater opportunity to disassociate from a candidate or for a candidate to dissociate from the campaign.⁵ election.”⁶ It's worth adding that Kennedy had to withdraw before the DNC had even announced its candidate or his opponent. These statutory deadlines advantage the Democrats and Republicans in multiple ways.

¹ No. OAG 55-80, 1980 WL 119496 (Wis. A.G. Sept. 17, 1980); see also Brown County v. Brown Cnty. Taxpayers Ass'n, 2022 WI 13, ¶ 32, 400 Wis. 2d 781, 971 N.W.2d 491.

² No. OAG 55-80, ¶ 5, 1980 WL 119496 (Wis. A.G. Sept. 17, 1980).

³ Id.

⁴ Id.

⁵ Compare Wis. Stat. § 8.16(7), with Wis. Stat. § 8.20(8)(am)

⁶ Wis. Stat. § 8.20(8)(am).

They get more time to vet a candidate. Should a candidate have a scandal (or health issues) just a few months out from the election, the major parties can potentially backtrack and try to get someone else on the ballot. An independent candidate, however, must move faster—a full month earlier. Not only does the statute give the Democrats and Republicans more time for vetting, but it also gives them more time to contemplate the best course of action for the candidate.

Here, upon reflection, Kennedy has (like President Biden) decided that for associational and expressive reasons, he does not want to run for President anymore. And Kennedy (like President Biden) decided he wanted to not just be off the ballot, he also wanted to give his endorsement to someone else. Kennedy for Trump; Biden for Harris. And Kennedy (like President Biden) wanted to make sure that there was no voter confusion in Wisconsin—no one thinking that he was soliciting votes. Yet, Wisconsin’s arbitrary, two-tiered deadlines prevent Kennedy (unlike President Biden or any other major-party candidate) from withdrawing and making sure that his message is clear.

B. Kennedy (like every citizen) has the right to convey a clear message without the Commission compromising it.

The Commission argues that Kennedy has no right to use the ballot as a means to convey his message. It’s worth reiterating that Kennedy is not trying to use the ballot to convey a message, but to make sure that his name being on the ballot doesn’t convey a message—there’s a world of difference. Kennedy is trying (as best he can) to avoid voter confusion and prevent his actual message—I’m supporting Trump for the Presidency—from being drowned out by the confusion created by his name being on the ballot. After all, the Supreme Court has been clear: “the rights of voters and the rights of candidates do not lend themselves to neat separation; laws that affect candidates always have at least some theoretical, correlative effect on voters.”⁷ Among the principal duties of election officials is to make sure that the citizens can “make informed choices in the political marketplace.”⁸ And that demands transparency, not confusion. Indeed, the Commission cannot argue that the same confusion would attend a major party candidate withdrawing on August 23 (the day Kennedy did); after all, the Democrats and Republicans had until September 3 to do so.

⁷ Bullock v. Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 143 (1972).

To escape that logic, the Commission cites and quotes Timmons in one breath and then disavows all that the case actually says in the next.⁹ In Timmons, the Supreme Court looked at fusion ballots – the candidate’s name appearing for two parties. This used to happen a lot, but Minnesota banned it. The Supreme Court noted (as Kennedy did in the petition) that “[t]he independent expression of a political party’s views is ‘core’ First Amendment activity no less than is the independent expression of individuals, candidates, or other political committees.”¹⁰

The Supreme Court then continued with the key provisos that the Commission’s brief has left out, namely, while it’s clear that we’re talking about core First Amendment activity, “States may, and inevitably must, enact reasonable regulations of parties, elections, and ballots to reduce election- and campaign-related disorder.”¹¹ No question there. The Supreme Court continued: “When deciding whether a state election law violates First and Fourteenth Amendment associational rights, we weigh the ‘character and magnitude’ of the burden the State’s rule imposes on those rights against the interests the State contends justify that burden, and consider the extent to which the State’s concerns make the burden necessary.”¹² That is, there’s a balancing test that courts must strike. We have a fundamental right at issue – Kennedy’s First Amendment rights are on one side of the ledger and the State’s ability to cure confusion on the other.

⁸ Citizen United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 366 (2010).

⁹ See Br. at 29–30.

¹⁰ Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 357 (1997) (quoting Colorado Republican Federal Campaign Comm. v. Federal Election Comm., 518 U.S. 604, 616 (1996)).

¹¹ Id. (emphasis added).

¹² Id. at 358.

The Supreme Court broke it down this way, in a point that echoes here: “It does not follow, though, that a party is absolutely entitled to have its nominee appear on the ballot as that party’s candidate.”¹³ That makes sense, it reasoned, because “[a] particular candidate might be ineligible for office, unwilling to serve, or, as here, another party’s candidate. That a particular individual may not appear on the ballot as a particular party’s candidate does not severely burden that party’s association rights.”¹⁴ That is, while there is not an absolute right to be on the ballot, there is an important right at issue, and that right has to be weighed against the State’s compelling interests – namely “avoiding voter confusion and overcrowded ballots.”¹⁵

But that’s not what’s going on here. Kennedy is not trying to get on the ballot and create confusion, he’s trying to stay off the ballot to avoid confusion. The Commission – not Kennedy – is the one that has fabricated an overcrowded and confusing ballot. Properly understood, Timmons simply does not support that Kennedy’s rights are non-existent or trivial; it says the opposite: “We conclude that the burdens Minnesota imposes on the Party’s First and Fourteenth Amendment associational rights – though not trivial – are not severe.”¹⁶ And it certainly doesn’t support the idea that the Commission has a compelling reason for keeping him on the ballot. Again, and to be perfectly clear about this: the very points for which the Commission is trying to use Timmons, those points actually support why Kennedy’s rights are not outweighed by the Commission’s needs. The Commission – not Kennedy – created these issues when, without any stated need, it refused to accede to his request to get off the ballot, a request that would have been granted if he were aligned with the two major parties.

¹³ Id.

¹⁴ Id.

¹⁵ Id.

¹⁶ Id. at 363 (emphasis added).

C. Hawkins does not control here; instead, in equity a remedy can be fashioned.

As a final point, the Commission over-reads Hawkins, and its impact on this case. For one, Hawkins is not settled precedent—it's the order of a denial of review setting out pragmatic considerations that are not present here.¹⁷ Indeed, Hawkins wanted on the ballot, Kennedy wants off the ballot. For Hawkins, new ballots had to be created, for Kennedy stickers only need to be applied. And while the Commission argues that this is a bridge-too-far in terms of logistics, it has to be remembered that this is a State law. The legislature has provided this very same mechanism to be used. The Commission and the clerks do not have free reign to ignore the legislature's commands or brand them as difficult and thus to be ignored. And in all this, it has to be remembered that Kennedy asked to be removed far before the ballots were approved and printed. The Commission cannot create this problem and then cite it as a reason for the Court not to honor Kennedy's rights and cure the very problem that it created.

There is no question that there is some cost to placing stickers on the ballots. But that's not the standard that Hawkins set, it dealt with voter confusion. The risk of voter confusion is too great to risk putting him on the ballot.¹⁸ But there is no voter confusion when Kennedy's name is covered up. Hawkins does not counsel that administrative burdens trump constitutional rights; it simply provides that voter confusion will. And here, ordering that Kennedy's name be removed or covered up cures any risk of confusion.

¹⁷ Hawkins v. Wisconsin Elections Commission, 2020 WI 75, 393 Wis. 2d 629, 948 N.W.2d 877.

¹⁸ Id.

Dated at Madison, Wisconsin, September 20, 2024.

Respectfully submitted,

Aaron Siri, Esq.* Elizabeth A. Brehm, Esq.* SIRI & GLIMSTAD LLP 745 Fifth Ave, Suite 500 New York, NY 10151 Tel: (888) 747-4529 Fax: (646) 417-5967 aaron@sirillp.com ebrehm@sirillp.com aperkins@sirillp.com Attorneys for Plaintiff Pro Hac Vice Motion forthcoming	ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR., Petitioner Electronically signed by Joseph A. Bugni Joseph A. Bugni Wisconsin Bar No. 1062514 HURLEY BURISH, S.C. P.O. Box 1528 Madison, WI 53701-1528 jbugni@hurleyburish.com (608) 257-0945
--	--

CERTIFICATION

I certify that this brief conforms with the rules contained in Wis. Stat. § 809.50(1) and (4) for a petition produced with a proportional serif font. The length of this petition is 2,198 words.

Electronically signed by Joseph A. Bugni
Joseph A. Bugni